WELLMAN ABANDON
AIR SHIP

Picked up With Crew of America off the Coast of North America.

GASOLINE THROWN OVERBOARD.

On Board the Royal S. S. Trent of Sea, Oct. 18.—(Special)—All my brave and loyal crew of the dirigible balloon America are safe on board the steamship Trent, having been rescued from the crippled balloon this morning and taken on the ship at 7 o'clock after 2 hours of difficult maneuvering.

When the America passed Nantucket on Sunday morning, as was reported at the time, conditions seemed favorable for the completion of the journey across the Atlantic. It was after we had gone well past that point that conditions arose which finally compelled the abandonment of the balloon this morning and the transfer of the men by the Trent. After passing Nantucket Island we went east northeast for an estimated distance of 140 miles. Our mortars were not in use, as the fresh westerly breeze we had at Nantucket was still driving us forward.

The Equilibrator a Mistake.

The heavy equilibrator, which retarded and dragged down the ship and interfered with the steering, was the fatal mistake of this campaign. The trial with the America, however, was well worth making. We covered 1,000 miles in her over rough seas. "I did not want the America saved, unless for further experiments. I am satisfied that the type will not do for crossing the ocean."

The trouble lay in the equilibrator, which would not do what we had expected, and with it we could not keep our course. Everything else was all right, and even with the broken mortar we could have gone ahead.

Shot High In The Air.

Sunday night the storm kept us so near the water that we had to drop gasoline in barrels to relieve the America of weight so that we could rise. On Monday morning, however, the fog was dissipated, and we found ourselves under a hot sun. The gas quickly expanded under the heat and with the lessened weight, due to sacrifice of gasoline in the night, the America shot up to a height of 3,000 feet, and we had great difficulty in getting her down.

Began to Lose Gas.

Under the great strain put upon the structure of the America weaknesses developed, and we began to lose gas. We had to throw more gasoline overboard to lighten the balloon so that we could keep afloat. As we drifted before the northeast wind on Monday night we threw over more until practically all our fuel was gone.

We know that the Trent, bound for New York, had left Bermuda on Monday, and we had been looking for her for several hours when we saw her lights. It was almost too bad that she was so near, as we had almost broken the endurance record. We would have been in the air seventy-two hours at 8 o'clock. We had gas enough to keep up for twenty-four hours more, but we feared that if we did not take this opportunity to leave the America another might not be offered to us, and we were glad to get aboard.
